- HB 1773

Why do we Oppose SNAP Restrictions?

No Proof, Just Punishment

SNAP restrictions don't improve diet quality or health outcomes.

- Restrictions ignore the real drivers of poor diets: insufficient income to buy healthy food and lack of proximity to full-service grocery stores.
- Diets of SNAP participants mirror the diets of other low-income households not on the program. The problem is not the SNAP card; it is the structural barriers of poverty.
- Erosion of Dignity: Restrictions undermine the program's foundation of autonomy. They increase stigma at the checkout line and treat families with distrust.

Why do we Oppose SNAP Restrictions?

Huge Costs for State and Retailers

SNAP restrictions add a maze of bureaucracy that burdens families, administrative staff and the state budget.

- These complexities are likely to increase the state's error rate, which will result in huge financial penalties for the state.

Restrictions force retailers to bear expensive costs to change Point of Sale (POS) systems and constantly update their databases. These may force smaller retailers to decide not to accept SNAP at all, and cut vital revenue.

How SNAP Uncertainty Affected Food Access

When SNAP is stable, families are better able to meet their needs; when it is uncertain, emergency food systems are quickly overwhelmed.

Policy decisions that weaken or delay SNAP shift pressure onto the charitable food system

- Federal shutdown concerns and uncertainty around SNAP payments led more households to seek emergency food support, which coincided with opening of new location
- After reopening in our new space, Gather served an average of 125 households per day, peaking at 168 households in late October
- Average daily households served more than doubled compared to our previous site, with peak demand exceeding operational capacity
- A temporary closure and changes to shopping frequency and hours were implemented to stabilize services and support staff and volunteers
